David Shrigley is well known for his humorous drawings that make witty and wry observations on everyday life. The Scottish artist has developed a deliberately crude graphic style that gives his work an immediate and accessible appeal, while simultaneously offering insightful commentary on the absurdities of human relationships.

To writer Dave Eggers, David Shrigley “is probably the funniest gallery-type artist who ever lived.”

In 2012, the Hayward Gallery in London will organize a major retrospective of Shrigley's work. He has exhibited internationally including solo shows in New York, Gateshead, Barcelona and Mainz. Shrigley also contributes a weekly cartoon to the U.K.'s Guardian's weekend paper.
